SOME of the country's top celebrities are opening up their personal diaries to Melton Shire youths, sharing their experiences of growing up.

The Reach Foundation, which runs a program at Caroline Springs, last week launched the inaugural Open Book Project campaign.

The project is encouraging people over the age of 18 to upload pages from their teenage diaries to show today's teenagers that they have been through similar experiences growing up.

Comedy duo Hamish Blake and Andy Lee plus actress Kerry Armstrong have already stepped up and have spilt their thoughts online.

Other famous faces supporting the project include Cathy Freeman, Sigrid Thornton, Tom Williams, Gorgi Coghlan, Rolf Harris, John Eales and Shane Crawford.

Reach Foundation co-founder, former AFL footballer Jim Stynes, has also shared his diary and hopes the project will show today's teenagers that no matter where life takes you, there are similar things we all experience when growing up.

Visit theopenbookproject.com to upload an entry until April 15.
